Location:

2707 Keyworth Avenue, Baltimore, Maryland

USGS Baltimore West, Maryland Quadrangle
Universal Transverse Mercator Coordinates:

Significance:

Built wide and shallow enough to allow sunlight to reach every room, this is an early example of so-called "daylight" houses that were constructed near Baltimore's parks between 1915 and 1955 as the rowhouse response to suburbia.

Description:

Located five blocks northwest of Druid Hill Park, this is the southwest end of a row of four houses that faces the Louisa May Alcott School No. 59 on Keyworth Avenue. Three bays wide and two stories high, the rowhouse features dark red brick laid in Flemish bond; a one-story porch with brick steps, concrete floor, and square brick columns; a wood-and-glass panelled entrance door, sidelights, and exterior vestibule addition; a quasi-mansard parapet with asphalt shingles and central dormer; and wood modillions at porch and main cornices. The double-hung wood windows have nine-over-one or twelve-over-one lights and stone sills; brick lintels have flat arches at the facade and segmental arches at the side elevation. The two-story rear porch enclosure expands interior living space. This property is not accessible for inspection.

History:

Record searches at the Maryland Historical Society, Enoch Pratt Free Library's Maryland Room, the Baltimore City Archives, and the City's offices of Permits and Property Location revealed no significant history of this particular property. The Topographical Survey Commission's 1914 Map of the City of Baltimore shows a vacant block at this location. A deed indicates that the Acme Building Company sold the house and land at 2703 Keyworth Avenue to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Reina in June, 1918. Presumably, this row of similarly designed houses was constructed in the intervening period.
